Titanic's sinking was Saskatchewan's loss

Presumed drowned. Five men, headed to Saskatchewan, were lost when the Titanic sank 100 years ago

JESSICA SMITH
jessica.smith@metronews.ca

Saskatchewan lost five men when the Titanic sank 100 years ago.

The passengers — who were headed for the province — died, and none travelled first class, according to the records posted online Monday by Ancestry.ca, with the help of the Nova Scotia Archives.

All five listed their intended destination as a town in Saskatchewan and each ended up on the lists of the "supposed drowned," according to the site. Their bodies, if found, were never identified.

Leo Zimmerman, a 29-year-old farmer from Basil, Switzerland, was headed for Saskatoon.

Brothers Lewis Braund, 29, and Owen Harris Braund, 22, from Holsworthy, England, were heading to the Qu'Appelle Valley. Lewis, a farm labourer, and Owen, an ironmonger, were third-class passengers.

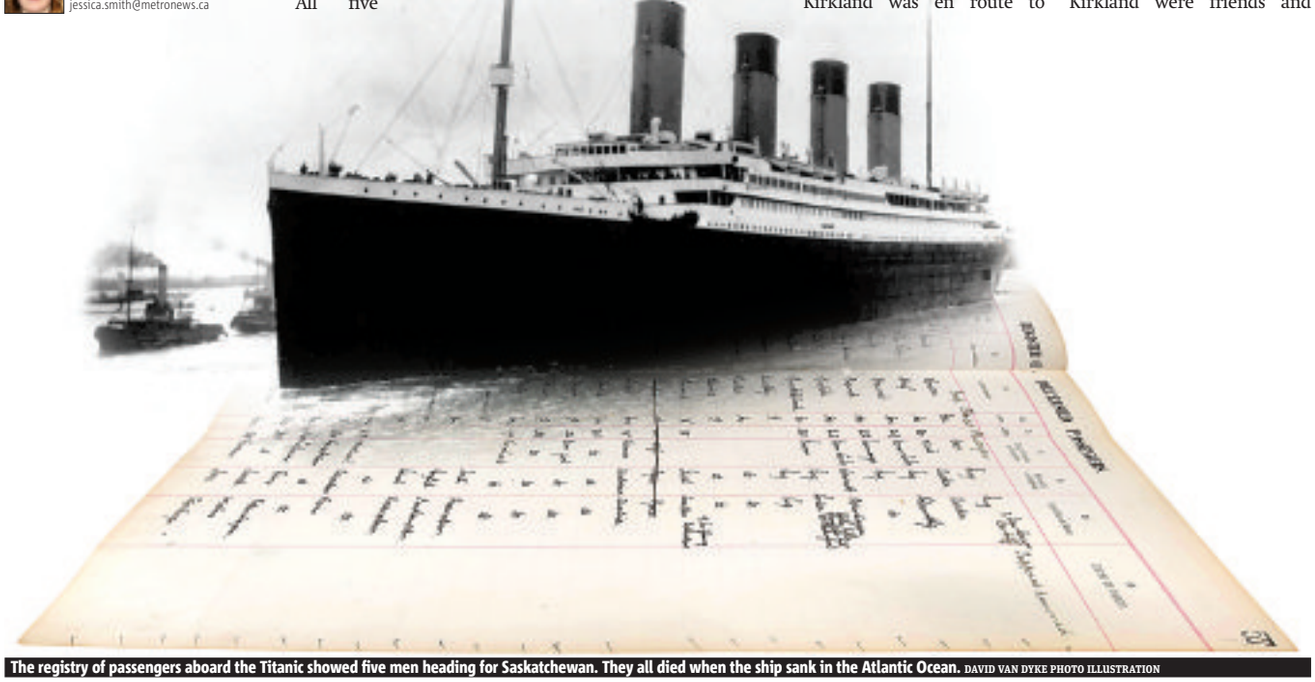
Frank Hubert Maybery, 36, of London was travelling to Moose Jaw.

Father Charles Leonard Kirkland was en route to Tuxford when the ship went down. His profession, noted in a tight script on the Register of Deceased Passengers, was "minister of religion."

Professional and amateur Titanic scholars have researched the ship's stories for decades and the would-be Saskatchewanians' lives aren't complete mysteries.

For example, Maybery and Kirkland were friends and travelled together, according to the compendium of Titanic research, Encyclopedia Titanica. Now, for first time, the source records are available online.

The online records include images from the Fairview Cemetery in Halifax, where 121 Titanic victims are buried, files from the Halifax Coroner, crew and passenger lists, and a list of the bodies recovered.



The registry of passengers aboard the Titanic showed five men heading for Saskatchewan. They all died when the ship sank in the Atlantic Ocean. DAVID VAN DYKE PHOTO ILLUSTRATION

A Saskatoon-based web-series won big over the weekend at the L.A. Web-Series Festival and creators say they were excited to represent Saskatoon on such a prominent global stage.

The web-series, titled My Lupine Life by Louis Pine, is about a boy facing the possibility of turning into a werewolf. It was honoured with five awards over the weekend, including best lead actor, best lead actress and outstanding sci-fi/fantasy/horror series.

The director and co-creator of the series, Torin Stefanson, said he was just thrilled to be at the festival.

"It's pretty exciting," said Stefanson, who is based in Saskatoon.

"Los Angeles is always considered the heart of the film industry in the entire world and the L.A. web fest is the first, biggest and most prominent festival for web-series in the entire world, so to be selected to be at the festival is an honour to begin with."

Stefanson said the entire show was written, shot and edited in Saskatchewan and all but four crew members involved in the show were from the province.

"We had over 10 people on the cast and over 20 people in the crew and all of the post-production was done in Saskatchewan as well, so it's a very Saskatchewan series," said Stefanson.

"Canada was well represented down here and for us to be able to represent Saskatoon and Saskatchewan was kind of a big deal."

Internet. CAP cuts could mean fewer hours for rural libraries

Library administrators in Saskatchewan say the federal government's decision to cut funding for the Community Access Program (CAP) will hurt the ability of rural communities to access the web.

Janet Smith, director of the Palliser Regional Library, said even though Saskatchewan won't be impacted as hard as the rest of Canada because of a province-sponsored network called C-NET, the lack of CAP funding will mean fewer opportunities for new equipment and fewer hours of public operation in rural areas.

"What it really does impact is the ability of our small, rural branches to replace equipment, and also in the past (the funding) has also provided open hours to some of our branches for them to better serve the public," said Smith.

"By cutting off this access to the public computers and reducing public hours … it definitely impacts the communities that offer those services."

She said even though the widespread impact won't be seen next year — because most branches just received new computers through CAP funding — it will be felt drastically in years to come.

"Three or four years down the road — because the public are hard on computers — that's when we'll see people saying, 'Sorry, we don't have any public access anymore,'" said Smith, adding the cuts will mean fewer hours for employees. MORGAN MODJESKI/METRO

Fake. Man charged over replica handgun

A man is facing charges after he allegedly brandished a replica handgun inside a Saskatoon restaurant on Sunday evening.

Police were called to the business in the 100 block of 33rd Street West just after 7:30 p.m. following reports that a man was inside and armed with a handgun.

Patrons were fleeing the scene when officers arrived less than a minute after the call. As they approached the building, police say a man armed with a handgun stormed out.

Officers confronted the man and ordered him to drop the weapon. It was later found to be a replica.

The man complied with police and was arrested. He now faces charges that include assaulting police and possessing a weapon that is dangerous to public peace. MORGAN MODJESKI/METRO

Transgender model tells story in TV interview

Reinstated. Vancouver's Jenna Talackova allowed to compete in Miss Universe Canada, says Donald Trump

Miss Universe contestant Jenna Talackova has a boyfriend and hopes to have two kids some day, but didn't initially tell him she was born male, the transgender Canadian beauty queen said Monday.

In an interview with ABC Television's Good Morning America, Talackova said she and her boyfriend of two-and-a-half years needed to get to know each other as friends before she told him about her sex-change procedure.

"Of course I had to let him know," Talackova said.

"He was very supportive, very accepting. He saw me for who I was."

Talackova was asked whether she wants to have children. She replied, without elaborating, "Yes, I want to have two children."

Talackova, 23, had already made the Miss Universe Canada final before pageant organizers unleashed a wave of global media attention last month by disqualifying her on the basis she had to be a "naturally born" female.

Pageant owner Donald Trump finally stepped in and overruled that decision, reinstating her ahead of the May 19 Miss Universe Canada contest.

High-profile American lawyer Gloria Allred said Trump did the right thing by allowing Talackova to stay in the competition, because the disqualification was simply wrong, something that should be recognized globally.

"We wanted Donald Trump to step up and be a leader in this battle for equality (and) we're very happy that he has conceded that rule does violate the laws of Canada and of the United States," Allred said.

Trump appeared to agree with that position last week, saying it wouldn't be fair to allow transgender contestants to compete only in certain countries.

Thousands gather for Vimy ceremony

Gunner Joe Foster, of the 15th Field Artillery Regiment, plays Last Post during a Vimy Day ceremony at Victory Square in Vancouver on Monday. In France, thousands of students carrying Canadian flags and banners paid silent tribute to nearly 3,600 fallen countrymen. An estimated 5,000 students braved persistent rains during a slow march that covered the two kilometres from France's Vimy Ridge Memorial to a pair of cemeteries where Canada's war dead are buried. Gov. Gen. David Johnston, Veterans Affairs Minister Steven Blaney, and other Canadian and French dignitaries were on hand for the ceremony. DARRYL DYCK/THE CANADIAN PRESS

Next question

Expert asks: What can the F-35s do?

An expert who's tracked the controversial F-35 stealth-fighter program says the Canadian government is not going far enough — and should conduct a thorough audit of what the new jet can and cannot do.

Winslow Wheeler, of the Washington-based Centre for Defence Information, says the debate following last week's auditor general report needs to move beyond the eye-popping cost and muddied procurement process.

The Harper government last week committed to reviewing the acquisition and sustainment costs of the F-35, among other things.

Wheeler, who's testified before Parliament and spent years working for the U.S. General Accounting Office, says auditor general Michael Ferguson's report was actually tame, and what's needed now is an independent, fact-based analysis of the claims made by the manufacturer. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Diamond Jubilee. Number of applications overwhelms Canadian Heritage: Report

A new document shows the Department of Canadian Heritage was flooded with applications for money to throw community celebrations to mark the Queen's 60th year on the throne.

Companies, schools, municipalities and other groups can apply to a $2-million pot for money to host their own Diamond Jubilee parties.

But a report by the Diamond Jubilee advisory committee said that by last fall, the department had already received more party pitches than it could pay for.

The report did not say how many of those eligible proposals would actually be funded. Nor did it give any examples of the celebrations proposed.

The government has not disclosed which groups received Diamond Jubilee money.

A spokesman for Heritage Minister James Moore said roughly half the funding has so far been allocated. The rest will be disbursed later this year.

The head of the Monarchist League of Canada attributed the large volume of applications to a renewed interest in the monarchy and the Royal Family.

"A lot of it has to do with the royal wedding of last year," Robert Finch said. "But equally, people have started to really recognize that the Queen herself is worthy of the celebration."

The government is spending a total of $7.5 million on the festivities. That includes $2 million for the community celebrations and $3.7 million for 60,000 special medals for civic-minded Canadians. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Pitches

Canadian Heritage received 232 proposals in the first round, of which 180 were eligible for funding.

- Seventy-eight proposals came from Ontario. Another 50 came from Atlantic Canada and 49 came from British Columbia, Alberta and the Yukon. Thirty-nine came from Saskatchewan, Manitoba, the Northwest Territories and Nunavut. Only 16 came from Quebec.

Investigation. Canadian navy may be linked to endangered orca's death

The corpse of a young killer whale whose death may be linked to Canadian war games has prompted an investigation by U.S. authorities.

The body of the southern resident orca — an endangered species in the United States — was discovered on Long Beach in Washington state in February, just days after HMCS Ottawa conducted sonar training exercises in the waters off Victoria.

A preliminary examination indicated significant trauma around the head, chest and right side of the orca known as L112, but results of necropsy and pathology tests and a scan of the animal's head are incomplete. Just hours after the navy sonar tests were heard, southern resident killer whales were spotted in the same area in the Haro Strait that divides Canada and the United States.

The law-enforcement office of the U.S. National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, or NOAA, has launched an investigation into the death. Brian Gorman, with NOAA's National Marine Fisheries Service, said investigators haven't made a connection between the naval exercise and the death of the whale. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Foreign help expected after fatal Pakistan avalanche

Needless deployment?
With over 120 soldiers buried alive, questions surface about need for military bases in isolated mountain region

In this Feb. 19 file photo, Pakistani army soldiers with the 20th Lancers Armored Regiment carry supplies up the 2,400-metre mountain near their outpost in Pakistan's Dir district. ANJA NEIDRINGHAUS/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

An avalanche that buried more than 120 soldiers in a Himalayan region close to India has put a spotlight on what critics say is one of world's most pointless military deployments: Two poverty-wracked nations engaged in a costly standoff over an uninhabitable patch of mountain and ice.

Since Saturday morning when the massive wall of snow engulfed a Pakistani military complex close to the Siachen Glacier, rescue teams have been unable to dig up any survivors. There is now very little hope that even a small number of people will come out alive.

A team of U.S. military experts was expected to arrive at the site Monday to assist in the rescue efforts, according to an American official. The team flew in from Afghanistan after the Pakistani army asked for help, the official said on condition of anonymity because he was not authorized to brief the media.

The U.S. military helped Pakistan after the 2005 Kashmir earthquake and floods in 2010, ventures that Washington used to bolster efforts to strengthen its ties with Islamabad, vital in the fight against al-Qaida. The current mission is far smaller, and comes amid a near-breakdown in relations between the two countries.

Switzerland and Germany are also sending small teams of experts to help, said the Pakistani army.

The missing soldiers are part of the Pakistani military deployment to the Siachen Glacier, which forms the northern part of Kashmir region, disputed between Islamabad and India and the main source of tension between the nuclear-armed rivals who have fought three wars since 1947.

Journalist killed. Fighting in Syria spills across the border

Syrian forces opened fire across two tense borders Monday, killing a TV journalist in Lebanon and wounding at least six people in a refugee camp in Turkey on the eve of a deadline for a ceasefire plan that seems all but certain to fail.

A witness at the Turkish camp said he saw two refugees killed, although that account could not be independently confirmed.

Across Syria, activists reported particularly heavy violence with more than 125 people killed in the past two days.

The Obama administration expressed outrage at the violence spilling over the frontiers, saying the Syrian government appeared to have little commitment to the peace plan that was negotiated by former UN chief Kofi Annan.

The latest bloodshed was a sign of how easily Syria's neighbours could be drawn into a regional conflagration as President Bashar Assad's crackdown on a year-old uprising becomes increasingly militarized, despite desperate diplomatic efforts.

Annan brokered a deal that was supposed to begin with Syria pulling its troops out of population centres by Tuesday morning, with a full ceasefire by both sides within 48 hours. But hopes for the plan collapsed after a fresh wave of violence and new demands by the regime for written guarantees that the opposition will lay down arms first.

Migrants fleeing war-torn Afghanistan plucked from boat by Indonesia

Indonesia says it has rescued 120 Afghan migrants from a leaking wooden ship headed to Australia.

An official called Joko from the National Search and Rescue Agency says they received a distress call from the ship's captain on Sunday and went to their aid. The Afghans were taken by tanker to a port on the western side of Indonesia's Java Island.

Witnesses said Monday that police were still negotiating with the migrants who were refusing to leave the tanker.

Joko says they will be handed over to immigration officers. Migrants without legal documents are usually deported home while others may apply for asylum.

Migrants from conflict-ridden countries have long used Indonesia's thousands of islands as a transit point for their way to Australia.

No grand jury in Trayvon shooting

Neighbourhood-watch incident. Decision on whether to charge unarmed teen's shooter in hands of special prosecutor

A grand jury will not look into the Trayvon Martin death, a U.S. special prosecutor said Monday, eliminating the possibility of a first-degree murder charge and leaving the decision of whether to charge the teen's shooter in her hands alone.

Angela Corey said her decision had no bearing on whether she would file charges against George Zimmerman, the neighbourhood-watch volunteer who has said he shot the unarmed black teen in self-defence.

Corey could still decide to charge him with a serious felony such as manslaughter, which can carry a lengthy prison sentence.

The case has led to protests across the U.S. and spurred a debate about race and the laws of self-defence. Martin was black; Zimmerman's father is white and his mother is Hispanic.

Trayvon Martin. MARTIN FAMILY/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Zimmerman has claimed self-defence in the Feb. 26 confrontation and shooting. Florida's self-defence law gives wide leeway to use deadly force and eliminates a person's duty to retreat in the face of danger.

A grand jury had been set to meet Tuesday. Corey has long had a reputation for not using grand juries if not necessary. In Florida, only first-degree murder cases require the use of grand juries.

Corey's decision means she doesn't have to rely on potentially unpredictable jurors, said David Hill, an Orlando criminal defence attorney.

"Let's give her the benefit of the doubt. Maybe she knows there isn't enough for first-degree murder but she wants to maintain control and charge him with something else," Hill said. "What does she need a grand jury for? She cuts out the unpredictability of the grand jury. She goes where she feels she has more evidence."

Corey took over the case last month after the prosecutor who normally handles cases out of the city of Sanford recused himself. That prosecutor, Norm Wolfinger, had originally called for the case to be presented before a grand jury.

"From the moment she was assigned, Ms. Corey noted she may not need a grand jury," said a statement from Corey's office.

Prosecutors sometimes use grand juries to avoid the political fallout from controversial cases. But Corey was elected by voters more than 160 kilometres away, so political problems are less of an issue, Hill said.

An attorney for Martin's parents said in a statement that he is not surprised by the decision to avoid the grand jury and hopes a decision is reached soon.

"The family has been patient throughout this process and asks that those who support them do the same," said attorney Benjamin Crump.

Suspects in court following Tulsa shooting spree

Two Oklahoma men suspected in a shooting rampage that left three people dead and terrorized Tulsa's African-American community made their first court appearance Monday.

Jake England, 19, and Alvin Watts, 32, appeared via closed-circuit TV.

The judge set their bond at $9.16 million US apiece.

Both are being held on suspicion of three counts of first-degree murder, two counts of shooting with the intent to kill and one count of possession of a firearm in the commission of a felony. They will be formally charged at a later date. Neither had an attorney present. Their next appearance is set for April 16.

Police have identified both suspects as white, while all five victims in Friday's shootings were black. Police say it's too early to say whether the attacks in Tulsa's predominantly black north side were racially motivated.

Jury selection starts in killing of Oscar winner's relatives

A judge will question would-be jurors as jury selection begins in earnest at the Chicago trial of the man accused of murdering singer and Oscar-winning actress Jennifer Hudson's mother, brother and nephew.

Hudson, who was not in Chicago at the time of the killings, told investigators she was in touch with her mother almost every day and became concerned when she couldn't reach her by late morning on Oct. 24, 2008.

Hours later, the bodies of her mother, Darnell Donerson, 57, and brother, Jason Hudson, 29, were found shot to death in the family home. The body of her seven-year-old nephew, Julian King, was found days later in a sport utility vehicle several kilometres away.

Selecting 12 jurors and six alternates able to set aside sympathy for the Hollywood star and assess guilt only according to evidence presented in court against William Balfour could pose a challenge.

It's expected to take two or three days to make final selections from among 150 prospective jurors.

Judge Charles Burns will aim to weed out anyone who might be swayed by the 30-year-old Hudson's celebrity, though he's unlikely to automatically exclude Hudson fans if they can convince him their biases won't affect their deliberations.

If convicted, Balfour, who is also 30, faces a maximum life sentence. His lawyers have said the evidence is circumstantial; prosecutors say the proof includes gun residue. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Testimony begins April 23

Court officials say Hudson is expected to attend every day of the trial.

- Hudson is on a 300-name list of potential witnesses, though it's not certain she will testify.
- Nine of 66 questions on a questionnaire the would-be jurors filled out dealt with Hudson's career.

Thinking of retiring on Mars? It could be a thing of the not-too-distant future, but blasting off remains expensive, and not a priority for earthly governments

ELISABETH BRAW
Metro World News

Astronauts can live in space for six months, so what's to stop others from spending half a year there, too? Or living there permanently?

Very little.

"An American millionaire who has made a fortune on hotels is already trying out inflatable space stations for use as space hotels," notes Chris Welch, lecturer in astronautics and space systems at the International Space University in Strasbourg, France.

"Once we have hotels in space, living in space won't be very far away."

The millionaire, Robert Bigelow, runs the company Bigelow Aerospace, whose space capsules will provide long-term accommodation for up to six people.

Galactic Suites also plans space hotels, while Richard Branson's Virgin Galactic intends to launch short-term space flights to lower orbit.

PayPal co-founder Elon Musk, who now runs space-exploration company SpaceX, says he'd like to retire on Mars.

And at universities around the world, researchers are designing the buildings, furniture and even games for humans in space.

The human colonies could float in lower orbit, like the International Space Station, or even be built on the moon.

But even though the science and engineering exists, outer space remains uninhabited by humans.

"It's not a technical problem, but a political one," explains Larry Bell, professor of space architecture at the University of Houston.

"Politicians are trying to fix the economy and national and international problems, so space isn't a priority. It's seen as too expensive."

Launching a spacecraft carries a price tag of some $10,000 per kilo.

Space agencies and private companies, however, are undeterred. NASA is even developing new space food for the expected increase in space travellers.

"Because there's no gravity, you can't even fry an egg in space," explains Alvin Drew, a NASA astronaut and head of NASA's advanced exploration systems habitat demonstration unit.

"But until now, the space food could only last for one to two years. Just going to Mars takes 18 months. So our food laboratory is developing new ways of cooking in space. It's still prepared food. But if you inject it into liquid you get a meal that's tastes very good. I just ate a space steak that tasted just like the real thing."

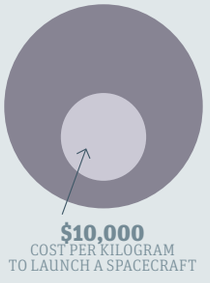
In the end, leaving Earth may become a necessity.

"Building space colonies will increase our chances of surviving," says Welch.

"Space exploration is humans' insurance policy."

Weighing the cost

Space — cheaper than gold!



Reluctant investors

Big space, little interest

The University of Houston's world-famous space-architecture program, headed by Larry Bell, has developed many of the buildings and furniture that could be used in space colonies.

But, says Bell, the number of applicants to the program has been dropping for the past several years.

"Young people see no future in space exploration," he notes.

That's because, five decades after John F. Kennedy announced the U.S. would send a man to the moon, the space race with the Soviet Union is over and politicians are reluctant to make major investments in space.

"Space isn't expensive compared to other things we spend money on," reflects Bell. "But as far as governments go, space now seems to be perceived as a burden."

Thrusters on full: Sex in space

Anybody who has seen Barbarella or Flash Gordon will know that space is a sexy place, populated with lustful aliens and new possibilities.

But having a sex life in space is not as straightforward as Hollywood suggests, and would represent a giant leap for mankind. With Earth's resources diminishing, humans need space. They also need sex, and the species' survival may depend on erotic breakthroughs on these, the big questions:

Has anyone had sex in space? Leia and Han try to make time. 20TH CENTURY FOX

Has anyone had sex in space?

Nobody's admitted it, although cheeky California scientist Dr. Rhawn Joseph says there are rumours of a couple "sealing the deal" on the International Space Station. In 1991, Jan Davis and Mark Lee became the first married couple to fly together, breaking NASA rules designed to keep team harmony, but they are believed to have resisted temptation.

Is it even possible?

"The fantasy might be vastly superior to the reality," says spoilsport NASA physician Jim Logan, pointing to motion sickness and the "messy environment" it would create. In 2000, French science writer Pierre Kohler claimed that NASA had been testing zero-gravity sex in different positions but it was revealed to be a hoax. NASA says it has never conducted any such research but is not against sex in principle, as long as astronauts have "a constant commitment to honourable behaviour."

What is the best space-sex tech available?

Probably actress/writer Vanna Bonta's "2 Suit," which uses light, flexible material that a couple can share playtime in. "Sex in space is not just a good idea, it's survival," said our hero. Real-estate billionaire Robert Bigelow is also ahead of the game with his Genesis prototype space hotel.

Could a baby be born in space — and would it be human?

Yes and no. "If you put an infant on Mars, they would adapt to the new environment," says Joseph, a neuroscientist. "And after several generations, you'd have a new species."

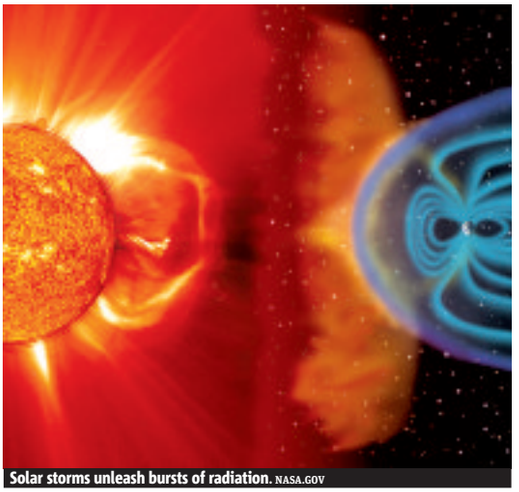
Seeking shelter from the storms in space

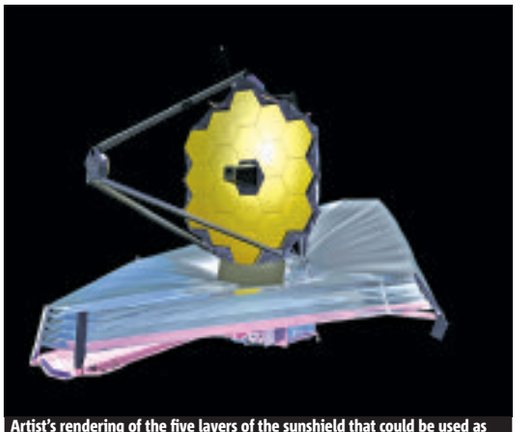
Just as Earth has sun and wind, so does space. In fact, the space weather presents a crucial challenge to human habitation.

"Space weather is not about sun and wind," explains Dr. John Farrow, professor of space applications at the International Space University. "It's about plasma and radiation. But it does have as much variation as our weather down here. In the most extreme circumstances, the weather can terminate a space mission."

The space equivalent of rain is radiation, which rains down on astronauts and forces them to carry "umbrellas" — radiation-proof space suits — or stay inside their capsule.



Solar storms unleash bursts of radiation. NASA.GOV



Artist's rendering of the five layers of the sunshield that could be used as a space "umbrella." NASA.GOV

Weather everywhere

"Space weather is not about sun and wind. It's about plasma and radiation. But it does have as much variation as our weather down here."
Dr. John Farrow, professor of space applications, ISU

"But just like a regular umbrella doesn't fully protect against rain, a 'space umbrella' doesn't fully protect against radiation," notes Farrow. "And the problem with radiation is that you can't see it."

Radiation, of course, causes chronic illnesses like cancer.

"On the moon you have no protection against space weather," explains Prof. Alex Ignatiev, director of the Center for Advanced Materials at the University of Houston.

"If we're going to live there, we'd need a one- to two-metre-thick layer of lunar sand on top of the capsule. Lunar sand absorbs radiation from the sun. Mars would be a little easier because it has a bit of atmosphere. But space weather is a major challenge."

On the other hand, the moon has water, and is easily accessible from Earth. But if humans are to establish space colonies, they have to design space suits that will provide complete protection against radiation.

They also have to design space capsules that can withstand sudden weather changes and fluctuating temperatures.

Not surprisingly, space agencies have entire teams dedicated to space weather, but they face a daunting task: Creating weather-proof gear that weighs very little. Weight is an essential issue as each kilo of payload costs $10,000 to launch into space.

In the meantime, space agencies have developed a new capability — and one that will be extremely useful even to us earthlings: Space-weather prediction.

"They can tell what's coming and issue an alarm to companies operating satellites," says Farrow.

"If the companies don't react, the satellites can be destroyed."

That would mean no cellphone calls, no satellite-beamed TV, no cloud-computing.

ELISABETH BRAW/METRO WORLD NEWS

Q&A

'Next stop will be the moon'

A Q&A with Alvin Drew, director of NASA's advanced exploration systems habitat demonstration unit.

When will we live in space?
Our goal is to explore Mars within 25 to 30 years. To reach that goal, we'll start by exploring asteroids, and keep exploring the moon. And to do so, we need human habitats on the moon and these asteroids.

What will habitats look like?
Very different from the International Space Station. They won't look different on the outside, but the difference is that the ISS is in lower orbit, within Earth's magnetic field, which protects us from radiation. A habitat farther away from Earth needs huge radiation protection. And farther away from Earth there's never a sunset, so your body doesn't know what time of the day it is. Then there are speed delays: Even if you're communicating at the speed of light, a signal takes 20 minutes to reach Earth. That's very different from the ISS, where we have cameras that literally look over the astronauts' shoulders and we can communicate immediately.

South Korea says North is planning third nuclear test

Recent satellite images show North Korea is digging a new underground tunnel in what appears to be preparation for a third nuclear test, South Korean intelligence officials say.

The excavation at North Korea's northeast Punggye-ri site, where nuclear tests were conducted in 2006 and 2009, is in its final stages, according to a report by intelligence officials that was shared Monday with The Associated Press.

Its release comes as North Korea prepares to launch a long-range rocket that Washington and others say is a cover for testing missile technology that could be used to fire on the United States.

The Obama administration said Monday that it would consider both a rocket launch and an underground nuclear test highly provocative and the move would leave Pyongyang more isolated.

"In each case this would be an indication of North Korea's decision at the leadership level not to take the steps that are necessary to allow North Korea to end its isolation, to rejoin the community of nations and to do something about the extreme poverty and deprivation that its people suffer," White House spokesman Jay Carney told a news briefing in Washington.

"North Korea is covertly preparing for a third nuclear test, which would be another grave provocation," said the intelligence report, which cited U.S. commercial satellite photos taken on April 1. "North Korea is digging up a new underground tunnel at the Punggye-ri nuclear test site, in addition to its existing two underground tunnels, and it has been confirmed that the excavation works are in the final stages."

U.S. State Department spokeswoman Victoria Nuland told reporters she was not in a position to confirm whether North Korea was preparing for a nuclear test after the rocket launch.

She said a launch would be "highly provocative" and a nuclear test "would be equally bad, if not worse."

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

History repeats?

Observers fear a repeat of 2009, when international criticism of the North's last long-range rocket launch prompted Pyongyang to walk away from nuclear disarmament negotiations and, weeks later, conduct its second nuclear test. A year later, 50 South Koreans were killed in attacks blamed on the North.

Iran nuclear chief open to possible compromise?

Talks. Tehran puts uranium-enrichment program on the table, but no specifics

Iran is signalling a possible compromise offer heading into critical talks with world powers deeply suspicious of its nuclear program: Offering to scale back uranium enrichment but not abandon the ability to make nuclear fuel.

The proposal — floated by the country's nuclear chief as part of the early parrying in various capitals before negotiations get under way Friday — suggested that sanctions-battered Iran is ready to bargain.

The talks involving Iran and the five permanent UN Security Council nations plus Germany, to be held in Istanbul, are the first direct negotiations on Tehran's nuclear program since a swift collapse more than 14 months ago.

Despite far-reaching complexities, the dispute effectively boils down to one issue: Iran's stated refusal to close down its uranium-enrichment labs.

For Iran, uranium enrichment is a proud symbol of its scientific advances and technological self-sufficiency.

The U.S. and its allies contend that the same sites that make fuel for reactors could also eventually churn out weapons-grade material. Iran has repeatedly insisted that its nuclear program is for peaceful purposes only.

The ideas put forth late Sunday by the nuclear chief, Fereidoun Abbasi, are an attempt to acknowledge this huge divide.

Abbasi said Tehran could eventually stop its production of the 20 per cent enriched uranium needed for a research reactor, used for medical research and treatments. But, he added, Iran would continue enriching uranium to lower levels of about 3.5 per cent for power generation.

Beating alleged. Negligence charges dropped in whistleblower's death

Russia's top investigative body said Monday it has dropped charges against a doctor suspected of negligence in the case of a prominent lawyer who reported official corruption in Russia, then died in custody while suffering from untreated pancreatitis.

The lawyer, Sergei Magnitsky, had accused Interior Ministry officials of using false tax documents to steal $230 million from the state. He was imprisoned for tax evasion in 2008 and died in custody in November 2009.

A private investigation concluded Magnitsky was severely beaten and denied medical treatment in prison, and it accused the government of failing to prosecute those responsible.

Magnitsky worked for Hermitage Capital, an investment fund owned and run by U.S.-born William Browder, who has since been barred from Russia as a security risk.

On Monday, Russia's Investigative Committee dropped negligence charges against Dr. Larisa Litvinova, citing a two-year statute of limitations in such probes.

Hermitage Capital sharply criticized the decision.

Tech deal. AOL selling hundreds of patents to Microsoft for $1 billion

Faltering Internet icon AOL was able to squeeze out more than $1 billion US from Microsoft for a trove of some 800 patents in an auction, the latest sign of just how valuable such portfolios can be for the world's biggest technology companies.

"There is a fight for market share occurring on multiple fronts — technology, patents, advertising," said Colin Gillis, an analyst with BGC Financial who covers Microsoft. "Microsoft, more so than others out there, has been (using) its patent portfolio as a way to generate licence fees. This should strengthen that."

Patents have become a hot commodity in the high-tech industry in recent years. They're useful both for attack (suing competitors) and for defence (warding off lawsuits with threats of countersuits).

AOL's stock rose $7.83, or 43 per cent, to $26.25 in midday trading, adding more than $750 million to its market capitalization.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Online edge

- Microsoft refused to say what the patents cover. Benchmark analyst Clayton Moran said they revolve around Internet technology, including advertising, search and mapping. This would help Microsoft go up against Google, a big rival that is ahead in all three areas.

Picture perfect. Social-networking giant looking to expand its mobile presence with the acquisition

Facebook is spending $1 billion US to buy the photo-sharing company Instagram in the social network's largest acquisition ever.

Instagram lets people apply filters to photos they snap with their mobile devices and share them with friends and strangers. Some of the filters make the photos look as if they were taken in the 1970s or on Polaroid cameras.

"This is an important milestone for Facebook because it's the first time we've ever acquired a product and company with so many users," CEO Mark Zuckerberg wrote on his Facebook page. "We don't plan on doing many more of these, if any at all."

Facebook said it plans to keep Instagram running independently. That's a departure from its tendency to buy small startups and integrate the technology — or shut them down altogether just so it can hire talented engineers and developers.

Facebook is paying cash and stock for San Francisco-based Instagram and hiring its 10 employees. The deal is expected to close by the end of June.

Instagram was only available on Apple devices until recently. An app for Android devices was released last week.

Business optimism on the rise across Canada

Business optimism in Canada is rising sharply as the gloom of the winter months appears to be giving way to better expectations for sales, hiring and investment, a new Bank of Canada survey suggests.

The quarterly survey of senior management from 100 representative firms, conducted over four weeks in February and March, found the outlook for future sales among the most positive since the recession.

It showed 58 of the respondents expected higher sales in the next 12 months, as opposed to 23 who expected fewer.

That put the Bank of Canada's important measure of business confidence at a positive 35, a big turnaround from the negative four balance of opinion in its January report.

It follows an unexpectedly strong employment report last week from Statistics Canada, which said 82,000 jobs were added in March, reversing what had been a few months of modest employment downturns.

The snap-back in business confidence, while encouraging, raises the risk of the central bank moving to hike interest rates later this year, although there is no urgency, added Bank of Montreal's deputy chief economist Douglas Porter. THE CANADIAN PRESS

- The bank says in a new provincial economic outlook that Alberta will grow a robust 3.6 per cent this year, well above the 2.2 average for the country.

Sony to cut 10,000 jobs worldwide: Reports

Japanese news reports say Sony Corp. will cut about 10,000 jobs worldwide over the next year.

The Nikkei business daily and other media Monday said Sony's decision to slash six per cent of its workforce comes as it struggles with weak TV sales and swelling losses.

Sony spokeswoman Yoko Yasukouchi wouldn't confirm the reports. New CEO Kazuo Hirai is holding a press conference Thursday.

Sony has announced restructuring plans by selling its chemical unit. Sony is also merging its LCD panel operation with Toshiba and Hitachi. Yasukouchi said those changes could affect up to 5,000 employees who are subject to transfers.

Sony reported a $2.1-billion US loss for October-December and more than doubled its projected loss for the full fiscal year.

I DON'T CARE ABOUT YOUR KLOUT SCORE

SHE SAYS...
Jessica Napier
metronews.ca/shesays

I recently received an email letting me know that I had FINALLY achieved a Klout score in the 40s, 45 to be precise. What tangible impact has this had on my everyday life? Absolutely none.

Founded in 2008, Klout.com allows users to measure their fluctuating influence across the social web. While "clout" refers to real political or social power, Klout with a "K" is a much more superficial unit of measurement, much like anything from the Kardashian Kollection.

Users relinquish all sorts of private data from their various social networks — Twitter, Facebook, LinkedIn — and Klout compiles a score ranging from one to 100. This influence score reflects your ability to drive action within your social circles.

I first learned about Klout at a web conference I attended last year. I registered immediately, a decision based on equal parts curiosity and vanity. After determining my score and realizing just how irrelevant it was, I completely forgot about my account.

Scope of influence

But while I was quick to dismiss it, many are eager to find out where they land on the barometer of influence. To date, the San Francisco startup has assigned Klout scores to over 100-million people and brands worldwide.

But while I was quick to dismiss it, many are eager to find out where they land on the barometer of influence. To date, the San Francisco startup has assigned Klout scores to more than 100-million people and brands worldwide.

Interestingly, Klout not only tells you who you are influencing and how much, but what topics you are influential about. However, based on my personal experience, the accuracy of these insights varies from spot-on to absolutely absurd.

Here are some of the peculiar subject areas that I am apparently influential about: The New York Jets, animals, diamonds. I can guarantee that I have never made an online (or offline) reference to the New York Jets in my life so who knows what sort of obscure logarithms they use to come up with this nonsense. As an animal-indifferent individual with a non-existent diamond collection, I'm pretty skeptical on whether these insights into my online reputation are really all that significant.

In a recent study titled The Rise of Digital Influence, author Brian Solis questions the accuracy of Klout and similar measurement tools that rank users' online social capital. Solis suggests that in reality these arbitrary numbers aren't a reflection of an individual's true influence or capacity to influence, but of their online visibility.

As social media becomes less about socializing and more about shameless self-promotion, companies like Klout certainly aren't going anywhere. And while I'm sure there is some real value in analyzing online engagement, this quantification of influence has also created an army of self-important tweeters obsessing over their personal brand.

Weather — a 'guilty pleasure'

High temperatures alarm experts

Temperatures in the lower 48 states were above normal for March, according to calculations by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration in the U.S. That far exceeds the old records.

The magnitude of how unusual the year has been in the U.S. has alarmed some meteorologists who have warned about global warming. One climate scientist said it's the weather equivalent of a baseball player on steroids, with old records obliterated.

Global 'warning'?

"Everybody has this uneasy feeling. This is weird. This is not good.... It's a guilty pleasure. You're out enjoying this nice March weather, but you know it's not a good thing."

Jerry Meehl, climate scientist who specializes in extreme weather at the National Center for Atmospheric Research in Boulder, Colo.

The facts

- It's important to note that this unusual winter heat is mostly a North American phenomenon. Much of the rest of the Northern Hemisphere has been cold, said NOAA meteorologist Martin Hoerling.
- The atypical heat goes back even further. The U.S. winter of 2010-2011 was slightly cooler than normal and one of the snowiest in recent years, but after that things started heating up.
- The summer of 2011 was the second-warmest summer on record.

Record-breaking

1.4

The first quarter of 2012 broke the January-March record by 1.4 degrees. Usually records are broken by just one- or two-tenths of a degree. U.S. temperature records date to 1895.

The Iron Lady

Director. Phyllida Lloyd

Stars. Meryl Streep, Jim Broadbent, Richard E. Grant

Phyllida Lloyd's biopic on Margaret Thatcher takes its title from the nickname of Britain's first female prime minister, who was hailed by some and cursed by others when she headed the government from 1979 to 1990.

The film's 2011 theatrical release gathered similar extremes of reactions. But nearly everyone agrees on one thing: Meryl Streep gives a towering performance in the title role. She was rewarded with a best-actress Oscar for a portrayal that takes Thatcher from shopkeeper's daughter to young bride, and from powerhouse in parliament to tottering, demented old widow. Lloyd, and writer Abi Morgan, use the controversial device of the ghost spouse. Thatcher's late husband, Denis, played by the reliable Jim Broadbent, appears frequently as Thatcher's spectral companion, offering advice and admonishments with loving devotion. It's a difficult trick to pull off, and its use here has not been universally applauded. But to me, it's a perfect evocation by two superlative actors of the almost supernatural bond that longtime couples achieve.

PETER HOWELL

Tyrannosaur

Director. Paddy Considine

Stars. Peter Mullan, Olivia Colman, Eddie Marsan

Possibly not since Gary Oldman's Nil by Mouth has the British underclass looked this bleak, and once again it's in the directing debut by an actor, Paddy Considine, who also writes the relentless screenplay. Considine's almost unyielding gloom makes Tyrannosaur a tough sit. But you won't find two finer performances than those by Peter Mullan and Olivia Colman, as their characters search for humanity amid social ruins.

Move over Bieber, here comes a Brit

New talent. British teen Conor Maynard is set to debut a single after being discovered on YouTube and tutored by R'n'B artist NeYo. Sound familiar?

Being called the new Justin Bieber has put British singer Conor Maynard on the music world's radar.

The 19-year-old from Brighton has gone from uploading videos of himself singing at home to working with Pharrell Williams on his debut album in Florida.

Maynard realized that by putting up covers of current tracks, people would stumble across his own versions. The results were impressive — NeYo offered to work with him after watching his version of Beautiful Monster and Chris Brown retweeted the video of his Yeah 3x.

Maynard couldn't believe his luck.

Quoted

"I have a very different sound. But it's obviously flattering to be compared to one of the biggest artists in the world right now ..."

British singer Conor Maynard on being compared to Justin Bieber

Actually, he was so skeptical he insisted on a chat with NeYo, to make sure it was the real R'n'B deal, rather than his friends joking around.

"It was about midnight when I was on Skype to him, everyone in my house was asleep," Maynard told The Associated Press.

"So I was like, 'Hi, NeYo.' That kind of killed any starstruckness — I had to talk really quietly."

Record company interest followed and now Maynard is dropping his debut single, Can't Say No, on April 20 through Polydor.

The comparisons with Bieber aren't that far off the mark. Both got their break via YouTube, both were mentored by an established rhythm and blues star (Bieber's being Usher) and both, while inspired by American urban music, are foreigners.

"In terms of the music, it ends there," says Maynard.

"(I have) a very different sound. But it's obviously flattering to be compared to one of the biggest artists in the world right now when I haven't even released my first single yet."

His talent was discovered when he was overheard singing to himself on the way home from school in Brighton, a hip coastal town in southern England.

His friends kept asking him to perform, so he started putting videos online to keep them happy.

Soon after NeYo spotted him, record companies caught on and he signed with Polydor in the U.K. MTV has picked him as being one to watch for 2012 after he won their Brand New competition.

Thanks to Maynard's online following, Can't Say No has already clocked up over three million views in a month. He's also got 124,560 followers on Twitter — and the number is rising.

Can't Say No is reminiscent of Justin Timberlake's vocals, with a catchy "Houston, I think we got a problem" hook.

"There's not too much meaning to be taken from it," he said, referring to its "girls, girls, girls" chorus.

An album is set to follow this summer and it has already gone down well with his five-star friends. Maynard has played it for Pharrell, Ludacris, Tyler The Creator, Lil Wayne and NeYo, among others

"They've heard all the tracks I was doing and what I'm planning to do — they're really excited about it as well," he said.

Stars to earn their stripes

A new TV competition series that tests celebrities against the demands of military exercises will be produced for NBC. Stars Earn Stripes is the working title of the show from veteran producers Dick Wolf (Law & Order) and Mark Burnett (Survivor, The Voice). Nine celebrities from music, sports and Hollywood will be paired with trainers at a "top-notch, secret training facility," the producers said. The contestants will face weekly challenges such as hostage-rescue exercises or placing a laser target atop a mountain. Burnett, who joined the British military at age 17 and served as a paratrooper, said celebrities and the audience will realize how "hard and scary" such tasks are. An air date for Stars Earn Stripes wasn't announced.

Gritty fantasy. Russell Hornsby on what it's like to bring Grimms' fairy tales to modern-day life

scene@metronews.ca

Russell Hornsby plays Hank Griffin on Grimm. The show airs Friday nights on CTV. HANDOUT

Considering his loves for both the grittiness of cop procedurals and the mysticism of fantasy film, the role of homicide detective Hank Griffin on NBC's fantastical Grimm seems to be tailor-made for Russell Hornsby.

"I'm a big fan of the Law & Order series, was a really, really big fan of Homicide: Life on the Street — that's always been just a joy of mine. But also at the same time I do like fantasy. My favourite movie of all time is The Wizard of Oz — just that whole notion there's somewhere else, and if you can imagine it, it can happen," the actor tells Metro.

Hornsby, who spoke with us from Portland, Ore., where Grimm films ("It's a wonderful respite from Los Angeles," he says), is in the midst of a love arc on the show.

"Hank has sort of been put under a love spell. That's about all I can divulge at this point," he says. "We have met this girl, she is a familiar face, and of course there's all these other machinations that root and ulterior motives, so it makes for a very Grimm-sical moment."

That's Grimm-sical, not whimsical, because the show has an ominous subtext. The Brothers Grimms' fairy tales "served as warnings, as cautionary tales," Hornsby tells us, which adds a darker edge he says isn't found on that other prime time fairy-tale drama, ABC's Once Upon a Time.

"I think the only thing that we have in common is that we're using Grimms' fairy tales," he says. "Other than that, I don't think that we're all that similar. Once Upon a Time is done very much in a Disney fashion, and I think that what we're doing with Grimm is really telling the stories the way they were originally intended."

It isn't child's play.

The Oxford-educated Hornsby has some deep thoughts about one fairy tale in particular.

"I always found Rumpelstiltskin to be very intriguing," he says. "And I think it has a lot of parallels with what's going on today, how men feel that they have the right to control women, whether it be mentally or physically. I think that's an interesting observation as to an underlying theme of the story: [It's] about control.

I'm from a time when we romanticized the whole notion of pimps and prostitutes, and when you're young you think that that idea is cool.

As you grow older, you see how wrong it is, and so when you talk about the Grimms' fairy tales being cautionary tales, now we realize they're not cautionary tales for just children — they're cautionary tales for us all."

McSpeedy. Doc follows Patrick Dempsey as he trains for 24-hour auto race

Patrick Dempsey is bringing his passion for auto racing to television with a new documentary series.

The Grey's Anatomy star will produce Road to Le Mans, a four-part series about his competition in the venerable French race, the Velocity channel said last week.

Dempsey, who has a professional auto racing team based in Georgia, will be both owner and driver at the 24-hour endurance race in June.

Road to Le Mans, set to air by mid-2013, will include his team's preparation for the event, including sponsor acquisition, training and time trials, and the race itself. Dempsey, a documentary buff, said combining the series and the art of racing is a "perfect fit."

For the fledgling, six-month-old Velocity, Road to Le Mans represents its biggest financial commitment yet to a series or a special, said Bob Scanlon, the channel's general manager and senior vice-president.

Velocity is part of Discovery Communications. Formerly HD Theater, Velocity reaches about 40 million homes and focuses on topics including cars, sports, adventure and travel.

Dempsey, who has driven at Le Mans before, exemplifies the "timeless cool" that is part of the channel's brand as it targets a male, upscale audience, Scanlon said.

The actor also can bring racing's drama to a new generation, he said, following in the tradition of other stars who competed on film and in real life, including Paul Newman (Winning), James Garner (Grand Prix) and Steve McQueen (Le Mans).

The mix, however, creates a burden of proof that an actor isn't merely a dilettante driver.

"You have people who are skeptical, who are looking for any mistake to make that the story, rather than the small things you've done successfully," Dempsey said.

He and his Mazda racing team have gained increasing credibility. Even with commitments to his day job that limit his competition, Dempsey posted top 10 finishes, including a career-best third last year with his teammates at the Rolex 24 in Daytona Beach, Fla.

At this point, his heart is with screen projects about the sport, Dempsey said. Besides Road to Le Mans, he is to star in the film adaptation of Garth Stein's 2008 novel, The Art of Racing in the Rain.

He's been devoted to the project, which finally found a home at Universal, for five years.

"It's the material for me that's gonna generate the most passion," he said. "With Grey's, after eight years, there's very little left to explore and you're pretty much on autopilot."

That sounds as if he's ready to call it quits as Dr. Derek Shepherd, a.k.a. McDreamy, on the ABC medical drama. But he demurs. "Nothing has been resolved, either to end or to continue," he said, adding diplomatically that "one has to be grateful" for work opportunities in today's economic climate. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Fast facts

Why Dempsey loves racing

Patrick Dempsey's love of racing is based on elements of physical and mental challenges and something else that's hard to find in Hollywood: "Control of your own destiny," Dempsey said. The track also is definitive.

"In racing, either you're fast and you're the first one across the line, or you're not," he said. That sounds a lot simpler than the politics of Hollywood.

Katy Perry is 'tired' of her fabricated fame. Zzzzz.

Oh boo-hoo: Katy Perry, one of the most manufactured pop stars of the past decade, is fed up with fame, according to Teen Vogue.

"I'm tired of being famous already! But I'm not tired of creating. Fame is, I think, just a disgusting by-product of what I do," Perry tells the magazine.

"It's a delicate creature — a wild animal of sorts. It can love you, and then it can attack you. But really, I stopped focusing on what other people think a while ago."

Oh, so you wearing an ice cream bra, marrying a super-famous actor and then divorcing him, riding Teenage Dream into the ground until it yielded as many No. 1 singles as Thriller and then releasing yet another version of the album (The Complete Confection) are all ploys to keep you under the radar? Yes, that totally makes sense.

Obesity could be worse than feared

Everybody's least favourite number, BMI (body mass index), may be totally off in calculating fat, according to a new study. However, before you get too excited, the potential inaccuracy actually underestimates body fat. According to a report in the Public Library of Science's PLoS One journal, BMI calculations, which are based on height and weight, were compared to X-ray absorptiometry — or DXA — scans, which calculates obesity based on fat-composition standard. Turns out, BMI calculations often classify people as "underweight" when the DXA scans would consider them obese, nearly four out of 10 times. The findings of this study, of course, imply that North America's already atrocious obesity rate is actually much worse than we know. Additionally, this means some may be unaware that they are obese (which is hard to imagine) and therefore not taking proper steps in health care.

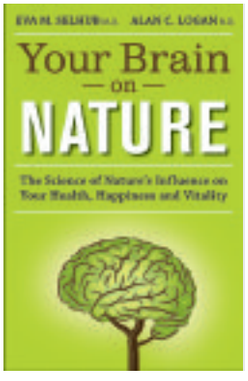
CELIA MILNE
life@metronews.ca



Get high on nature. Walking through a forest feels better than sitting at a desk.

Duh. That's a no-brainer.

But now experts around the world are gathering hard, scientific evidence for what we all know innately: exposure to nature has a powerful influence on the brain.

"There isn't a single study that proves beyond question that nature is good for the brain, but rather it is the combination of all the studies," says Dr. Alan Logan, co-author of a new book called Your Brain on Nature.

His message?

"Take nature breaks and power down the smartphone." Logan is a graduate of the Canadian College of Naturopathic Medicine and now lives in Connecticut.

His co-author is Dr. Eva Selhub, a Harvard Medical School physician.

Japanese studies were among the first to show that immersing oneself in green space, or "forest bathing," has a positive effect on stress and immunity.

Emerging studies show time spent in forests or urban parks also leads to enhanced cognitive focus and positive mental outlook, says Logan.

Why? It is partly related to chemicals released from trees called phytoncides, which have been linked to improved immunity, and partly because of invisible negative ions found near water and forests; they have been linked to brighter mental outlook.

Why we should eat whole grains

BEST HEALTH MINUTE
Bonnie Munday
Editor-in-chief
Best Health Magazine

In each issue of Best Health, our Eat Well section includes easy and delicious recipes, and also shows you the latest and most credible research into the science of foods. In our March/April issue, on newsstands now, we outline the benefits of getting whole grains, which are a great source of fibre and protein. Adults are supposed to get six to seven servings of grains a day. Here's why:

Fight "bad" cholesterol.
Years of research shows that oats can lower the body's 'bad' cholesterol without an adverse effect on 'good' cholesterol.

Blast belly fat.
A study published in 2011 in the journal Obesity linked eating more soluble fibre to reduced visceral fat. This fat is found deep in the belly surrounding vital organs; higher amounts are associated with high blood pressure, diabetes and fatty liver disease. For every 10-gram increase in soluble fibre that study participants consumed per day, visceral fat was reduced by almost four per cent.

Prevent gallstones.
A study published in the American Journal of Gastroenterology found that women eating the most foods high in insoluble fibre had a 17 per cent lower risk of gallstones compared to those eating the least.

Control blood sugar.
According to research done at Lund University in Sweden, eating the right grains for breakfast — such as whole-grain barely, either boiled or in bread — helped to moderate increases in blood sugar for up to 10 hours. This is beneficial because large fluctuations in blood sugar levels are linked to an increased risk of type 2 diabetes, obesity and cardiovascular diseases.

Fights free radicals.
Spelt — an ancient grain related to wheat — is a rich source of manganese. It works with an enzyme that helps fight free radicals in the body that may play a role in aging, heart disease and cancer, preventing some of the damage the free radicals cause. A half-cup serving of cooked spelt provides 60 per cent of your daily needs.

1. In a skillet over medium-high heat, melt butter. Add onion and shiitakes; sauté for 4 minutes. Add rice and cook, stirring constantly, for 1 minute. Add 250 ml (1 cup) of the wine and cook, stirring constantly, until completely absorbed.

2. Add half of the chicken stock or broth, stir several times, then let simmer until liquid is nearly completely absorbed. Continue adding stock, 125 ml (1/2 cup) at a time and stirring constantly until absorbed between each addition.

3. When all of the stock has been added and absorbed, add another 250 ml (1 cup) of the sparkling wine. Stir until absorbed. The rice should be tender, but still just barely firm at the centre. Stir in cinnamon, salt and pepper.

4. Add cheese and mix until melted and creamy. Adjust seasonings.

5. Remove the pan from heat. Stir in salmon and remaining sparkling wine to serve.

Spice up your dinner table with Chili Garlic Roasted Shrimp with Fettuccine

Rule No. 1 about spicy ingredients — you don't need to love spicy foods to love what spicy ingredients can do for the foods you do love.

That's because foods such as hot sauces can do way more than simply add mouth-searing heat. Adding just a touch will heighten the other flavours of a dish without adding noticeable spiciness.

Throughout Asia there are numerous condiments referred to as sambals. Most are made by grinding together chili peppers and vinegar. Depending on where you are, other ingredients — such as dried shrimp, fermented soy beans, brown sugar, spices, coconut milk — may be added.

The result is a family of sauces with bright, punchy flavour and a fair amount of heat. They usually accompany meat and rice dishes and are added to taste.

The international aisle of most mainstream grocers in Canada will offer at least one or two varieties and they are worth checking out.

One of the most common is sambal oelek (also called chili paste or fresh chili paste), which is a simple blend of crushed chilies, salt and vinegar. Alongside sambal oelek, you may also find something labelled chili garlic sauce, which is sambal oelek with garlic added.

Either is a fine choice for any of these recipe ideas. The flavours are intense, slightly acidic and almost pungently sweet.

Like most vinegar-based condiments, sambals can be refrigerated for months after opening (most are marked with "best by" dates).

One caution — the word sambal also sometimes refers to a spicy dish. You're looking for the condiments, which are sold in plastic and glass jars.

The condiment is a great addition to give this dish an added kick.

Ingredients

- 30 ml (2 tbsp) olive oil
- 5 ml (1 tsp) kosher salt
- 2 ml (1/2 tsp) freshly ground black pepper
- 15 ml (1 tbsp) sambal oelek or chili garlic sauce
- 500 g (1 lb) large raw shrimp, shells and veins removed
- 1 pkg (340 g/12 oz) fresh fettuccine
- 125 ml (1/2 cup) grated Parmesan cheese
- 3 green onions, chopped

1. In a large bowl, mix together oil, salt, pepper and sambal. Add shrimp and toss well.

2. Transfer shrimp, as well as any sauce in the bowl, to a rimmed baking sheet. Roast in 230 C (450 F) oven for 5 to 7 minutes or until pink and firm.

3. Meanwhile, in large pot of boiling salted water cook pasta for about 5 minutes or until tender but firm. Drain reserving 60 mL (1/4 cup) of the cooking water.

4. In a large bowl, combine pasta and shrimp. Use a silicone spatula to scrape any liquid from baking sheet into the bowl. Toss well.

5. Sprinkle cheese and green onions over pasta and shrimp, as well as a bit of the reserved pasta cooking water to moisten. Toss until cheese is melted. Funeral etiquette

CHARLES THE BUTLER
askcharlesthebutler@metronews.ca
For more, visit charlesmacpherson.com

Because my ex-husband is angry and uncivil, I have not been in communication with my ex-in-laws since our divorce. We were together for more than 20 years and have children. When there is a death or illness in that family, what protocol should I follow? It would seem strange for me to ignore it or not attend a funeral.
Please advise.

Divorces can sometimes make attending a funeral a difficult process. ISTOCK

Hello. As you are experiencing, anger and lack of civility is unfortunately common after a difficult divorce, and now translating that into dealing with former family members for such things as death becomes really tough. Even worse, the stress and unease of death makes many people react in an irrational and difficult way.

So back to your question; what should you do when you wish to attend a funeral of a divorced partner? Remember going to a funeral generally has two objectives:

1. To assist you with your personal grieving process.

2. To assist the family and be supportive of them through their grieving process.

If it is a large public funeral, you should feel free to attend. However, if this is a small or private funeral I think it's best you speak with the next of kin (ideally the head of the family of the deceased or your former husband or in-laws etc.).

First express your condolences and ask if they would feel comfortable with you attending the funeral, since you knew and loved the deceased for more than 20 years.

If they say yes, then attend the funeral, but out of respect for your ex-husband and children, keep a low profile. You are there to pay respects to the person who has just died.

In the event that the family says no, then don't make a big deal about it. You can celebrate this person's life in several ways: have a church mass said in this person's name or make a small donation to a hospital or organization in the name of the deceased.

Finally no matter what the scenario is, write a note of condolence to each of the family members you are close with.

This is the nicest and most gracious way to think of the living and the dead at the same time.

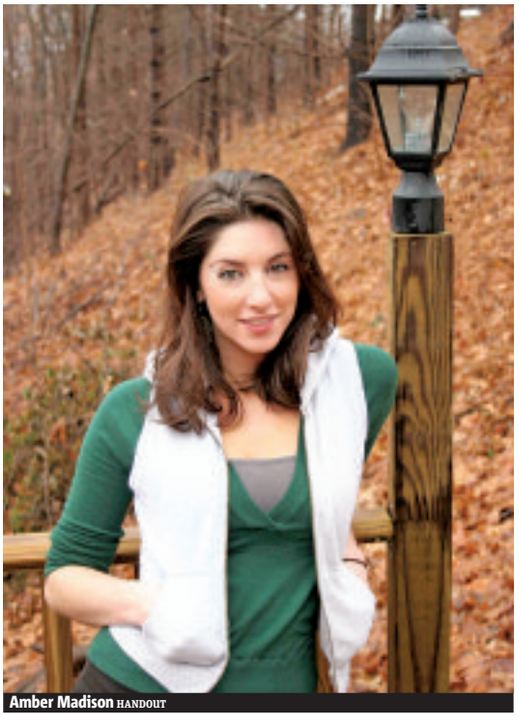
Are all guys just jerks?

Dating. Amber Madison debunks myths about men

HEIDI PATALANO
Metro New York

Dating can be such a confusing, nerve-wracking experience that many women tend to believe certain "truths" about men in order to get some sense of security: "Men are biologically driven to cheat," "men are scared of commitment" and "men care about looks more than anything else" are a few favourites.

But sex and dating expert Amber Madison refused to believe that all of these assumptions were absolutes. To investigate, she travelled to 10 cities and interviewed thousands of men to answer the question, "Are all guys a-holes?" Her book by that very name offers a surprising answer. Here are a few of Madison's findings.



Amber Madison HANDOUT

Guys only care about sex.
"Seventy-three per cent of guys said their primary interest in women was someone to have a long-term relationship with. Eight per cent said sex, and 18 per cent said short-term companionship/dating," she says.

Guys you meet in bars are sleazy.
"True, guys you meet in bars are in a sleazy frame of mind — they're more likely to stretch the truth in order to get you in bed. But they are just as likely to want to find a girlfriend and get married as guys not in bars," Madison says. "Sex may be their priority at the moment but it's not their priority in general."

Guys care about looks more than anything else.
"Only 30 per cent of guys gave looks a five (on a one to five scale of importance), while many more gave humour, intelligence, being caring and ambition a five," she says.

It's a bad sign when a guy doesn't kiss you at the end of a first date.
"Only 19 per cent say they don't kiss a girl after a date because they didn't like her," the author explains. "Thirty-four per cent said they didn't because it might be too forward, 21 per cent said they didn't have the opportunity and 12 per cent said they wussed out."

Guys don't want to get married.
"Ninety-five per cent of guys say they want to get married someday. They talk or think about marriage a lot."

Guys want to make the first move.
"Fifty per cent of guys said a girl making the first move was a turn on, 45 per cent don't care either way and only five per cent think it's 'too aggressive.'"

Two Sisters. Friends with flirting benefits

TWO SISTERS
Andrea and Claire
Life@metronews.ca

Dear sisters,
I've been friends with a smart, gorgeous girl for two years now. All our friends always said we'd make a good couple if we were both single. But because she had a long-term boyfriend and I'd been dating, we just exchanged dating stories and flirted a little, but it was "safe" because we were both taken. Now she's single and so am I, and she's sowing her wild oats and still uses me as a confidant. Am I doomed to be her BFF? Boy not friend.

Claire: Dear BNF,

Don't you wish life were like the movies, so that one of your mutual friends would get her drunk then shout "Can't you tell your true love is right in front of you?" after which she would show up at your house declaring her lust for you?

Basically you two have become friends with flirting benefits. The question is whether you can become more of a flirtation with friendship benefits. Turning it around takes guts and confidence on your part: you need to let her know you're into her without doing it so bluntly that you risk losing the friendship if she's not into being more than a friend.

Either way, you're in each other's lives.

Andrea: Dear BNF,

Ever hear of the Ladder Theory? Guys have one ladder for all women that they hopefully aren't related to: the higher up she is, the more he wants to sleep with her.

Girls, on the other hand, have two ladders: one is the "friend" ladder because unlike guys, we naively think we can have a platonic relationship with the opposite gender. The other is the standard dating ladder. Between them is the Pit of Doom.

Friends like you often try to jump ladders and fall into the pit, never to be seen again. So, if you can handle utter and total rejection, go for it.

If not, let her keep you on the top rung of friends.

Is it so bad to be around a gorgeous girl without all the messy emotions of a relationship?

Small savings, big payoff: 5 easy steps to an extra $2,000 RRSP contribution

It's not rocket science. A few little tricks can help you maximize your RRSP contribution before next year's deadline

YOUR MONEY
Alison Griffiths
money@metronews.ca

You've finished your tax return and you're upset because the refund is less than you hoped. But you're also annoyed with yourself because you didn't maximize your RRSP contributions.

There's not much you can do for 2011 but you still have over 10 months to find an extra $2,000 to ease next year's tax burden. (The following advice is for those who have their debt load under control. If not do the same thing but divert the money to your debts.)

Alison's money rule

"Small monthly changes now add up to a bigger RRSP contribution."

1. Devote some of your tax refund to your RRSP ($750)

Last year, according the Canadian Revenue Agency, the average refund was $1,506, most from payroll deductions. Take half of that and put it into your RRSP.

2. Increase your monthly RRSP contributions by $50 ($500 annually based on the 10 remaining contribution months)

If you haven't already enrolled in an automatic RRSP payroll deduction program, start one at $50 a month. If one is in place increase the deduction by $50.

3. Save your coins ($250)

This is an easy and painless way to build up excess cash. Put a container in the entranceway of your house and empty your pocket or purse each time you enter the house. Count it up monthly and take it to the bank. Try a little coin-saver dance with each deposit. People will think you are weird but remember, you're laughing all the way to the bank.

This little piggy can help you with step #3. ISTOCK IMAGES

4. Windfalls ($225 annually)

Ask your parents, grandparents and siblings for cash gifts instead of those icky ties and dreadful drugstore bath sets. Explain why and most will be delighted to have that chore lifted from their shoulders.

Think long-term

Here's a cool 20-year plan:

- $70,000. Contributing an extra $2,000 annually will increase your retirement savings by nearly $70,000 in 20 years (assuming a five per cent average rate of return).

5. Eliminate one non-necessity a week ($275)

Almost everyone spends money on something they like but don't need. For example, cut out one specialty coffee, restaurant lunch, takeout meal or magazine a week.

Make these five steps a habit and you'll be well on your way to cutting your taxes and beefing up your retirement savings.

Home selling tips

Sleepless in suburbia

FUN AND FRUGAL
Leslie Scorgie
money@metronews.ca
@Lesliescorgie on Twitter

After two years of deliberation, I listed my house for sale this week. Though I love my place, I have been dreaming of inner city living for years — walking to work, biking to the grocery store, spending less time driving and more time enjoying life.

Listing my property was the easy part. But, my nerves are keeping me up at night. Will my property sell? Can I afford a more expensive home? To reduce my anxiety, I've adopted frugal home-buying basics.

First, buying an affordable home starts with knowing what your budget can handle. I spent three hours last Monday running various budget scenarios addressing monthly mortgage payments, property taxes and more. Using an online banking calculator, I determined the maximum home value I can afford within my desired budget.

I sat down with my mortgage broker on Wednesday to get a pre-approved mortgage. Surprisingly, I was approved for over one hundred thousand dollars more than what I thought I could afford. But, I'm going to stick with my original budget and avoid home poverty.

Frugal home buying basics can help you avoid home poverty. ISTOCK IMAGES

On Thursday I started researching mortgage rates for two reasons; first was to fine-tune my budget calculations and second was to prepare myself for an imminent interest rate negotiation when I'm ready to formalize a mortgage. Current mortgage rates are historically low, making payments more affordable.

Friday was the first day I looked at new properties and the day my existing home became available for showings to potential buyers. Though I didn't find my dream home, nor did my house sell, I found it valuable to see what's available in the market.

Because of my moderate tolerance for risk, it's become clear to me throughout this weekend that my personal preference is to sell my existing home before I make an offer on a new one. That way I won't end up financially strapped; carrying two homes accidentally.

Getting organized and being frugal is calming my nerves and restoring my sleep.

Lokomotiv tragedy

Russian club finds coach for rebuild

After becoming the new head coach of Lokomotiv Yaroslavl, Tom Rowe was intent on looking ahead to a bright future rather than focusing on the Russian team's tragic past. The 55-year-old American accepted the job with the rebuilding KHL team on Monday after spending more than a decade working in various roles for the Carolina Hurricanes organization. "It's a great opportunity for me," Rowe told The Canadian Press. "My family and I are very comfortable with it and looking forward to it." Lokomotiv is expected to rejoin the KHL next season after spending a year recovering from the September plane crash that killed 44 people, including the entire team and coaching staff. The job opportunity came with a phone call from former NHL executive Mike Smith, who is helping with the Lokomotiv's rebuilding efforts and wanted to see if Rowe would be interested in the position. He later went through an interview with team president Yury Yakovlev.

Young Oilers stars eager for team to reach next level

NHL. Taylor Hall says team needs to be a contender next season

After six years out of the playoffs and a 29th-place finish on the heels of consecutive 30th-place seasons, the promise of a bright future is starting to wear thin for fans of the Edmonton Oilers.

It's not going over a lot better with Taylor Hall, one of the players those hopes hinge on.

While Hall, at the heart of Edmonton's rebuild along with fellow second-year player Jordan Eberle and rookie Ryan Nugent-Hopkins, has high hopes for the future just as fans do, he isn't willing to use short-term pain in the name of long-term gain as a crutch indefinitely.

Hall, his second season ended by shoulder surgery, made his expectations for next season abundantly clear as the Oilers cleaned out the dressing room and did exit interviews at Rexall Place Monday.

"I definitely think we have a good, young core here and we're definitely exciting and we definitely have a lot of potential, but I think we were sitting here last year saying the exact same thing," Hall said.

"At some point, it's got to turn into something. It can't all be hope and promise because eventually the fans are going to stop hoping, they're going to stop wanting and they're going to stop coming.

"I think next year has to be a playoff year. We have to be a contending team, at least, a team that teams are afraid to play because of our skill level, the way we compete and the way we play defence. It is fun to be in that young nucleus of really good players, but we have to do something with it eventually."

With a 3-0 loss to Vancouver Saturday, the Oilers finished the regular season with a record of 32-40-10 for 74 points, leaving them 14th in the Western Conference and 29th overall.

While that represents modest progress, a total of seven more wins than 2010-11 and 14 more points than the 62 of the previous two seasons, there remains work to do. Even with the gains, the Oilers finished 21 points back of the eighth-place Chicago Blackhawks.

When fans talk about a climb back to respectability, most of the talk revolves around Eberle, 21, Hall, 20, and Nugent-Hopkins, 18. They had terrific seasons and finished one-two-three in team scoring.

Aside from Eberle, Hall and Nugent-Hopkins, defenceman Jeff Petry and goaltender Devan Dubnyk made great strides and took on bigger roles as the season went on. At the same time, veterans like captain Shawn Horcoff and Ryan Smyth took lesser roles.

"We're not far off," Smyth said, when asked about contending for a playoff spot next season. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Unsatisfied

"I think you just need that winning mentality, to be honest. We've obviously lost a lot of games the last couple of years. You can't be satisfied with what we did." Jordan Eberle, looking ahead to next season.

NHL. Sedin returns to ice as Canucks prep for Kings

Although Daniel Sedin was quiet after practising for the first time since suffering a concussion, his twin brother sounded confident Vancouver's leading goal-scorer could be ready to play sooner than later.

NFL. Goodell upholds penalties in bounty case

Sean Payton now knows for certain he won't be coaching in 2012.

And the New Orleans Saints must figure out whether Bill Parcells or someone else is best suited to take over their team.

NFL commissioner Roger Goodell on Monday rejected the Saints' appeals of their unprecedented punishment stemming from the NFL's investigation of the club's bounty system. The program offered cash bonuses for big hits that knocked opponents out of games or hurt them enough that they had to be helped to the sideline.

Payton's suspension begins Monday and runs through the Super Bowl in New Orleans. Goodell upheld bans of eight games for GM Mickey Loomis and six games for assistant coach Joe Vitt, along with a $500,000 US fine and the loss of second-round draft picks for two years. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS
